

"How use doth breed a habit in a man," says Shakespeare. The force of habit is the pivot on which our whole scheme of selling short-trouser boys' clothes, shoes, hats, and furnishings, without profit, turns. We take the boys while young to train them into future customers.

Coming as little men they'll come as big men, for we have the best—we use the word advisedly—boys' clothes in New York city for the money. Why not, selling without profit?
